

John Mercer revolutionised the process of dyeing when he invented the Mercerisation process. This process involves treating cotton with a strong caustic alkaline solution to improve the materials properties which benefits the final dyeing of the cotton fibres.

A Brief History Of Mercer Park

The land occupied by Mercer Park was originally common land between Great Harwood and Oakenshaw which was enclosed to provide grounds for Mercer House which was built in 1802 by Thomas Hargreaves.

Mercer House took its name from its most notable occupant John Mercer (1791-1866) whom became famous as 'the father of textile chemistry'. Mercer House and Park were left for use as a public museum and park under the terms of a charitable trust established in 1916 under the will of Miss Maria Mercer, John Mercers' last surviving daughter, who died in 1913.

Friends of Mercer Park

Mercer Park is very much a community Park and facilities within the park reflect this. It is a place for leisure and recreation for all ages and this is evident throughout the year. The park continues to evolve with the help of Friends of Mercer Park (FoMP) a local community group.

For further details of FoMP contact 01254 397028
